2025 HORTICULTURE

2025 FEATURE PLANT - FERNS

Ferns rank among Earth's most ancient plant groups, boasting a fossil record over 300 million years old. Some estimates hint they may be even older. Despite their impressive age, many early ferns have gone extinct. The ferns we see today evolved relatively recently, with much diversity arising in the last 70 million years. Currently, ferns are the second-most diverse group of vascular plants, surpassed only by flowering plants. This diversity provides gardeners with numerous options for ornamental cultivation, ranging from towering tree ferns to low-spreading varieties.

This year in Goyder, we are showcasing this fascinating array of plants in both landscaped floor displays and on the competition benches.
