JUDGING CRITERIA

HONEY

The judging criteria for Raw Honey will differ from the normal liquid honey (Refined Honey) in that Brightness and Clarity will be replaced with the term 'Purity' indicating that the honey should be free from particles, solids and wax etc. as well as showing no signs of crystallisation.

Raw honey may be described as being that which has been extracted, settled (removal of wax particles), and bottled.

As raw honey may be more prone to crystallising, appropriate warming may be required to ensure a liquid state is maintained.

Creamed Honey is a value adding process arrived at by blending generally two honeys together, the product should reflect the process of blending to arrive at a uniform colour preferably white or cream, and the viscosity of the product should be of a spreadable texture.

Candied or naturally granulated Honey is in itself a natural process which occurs in most honey. Again, it should be even in texture, the finer the crystal the better, and there should be no evidence of fermentation in the jar.

The criteria by which honey is judged are as follows: These standards are modified for crystalised or creamed honey.

1. Presentation - clean and in keeping with standard requirements (lids, etc).
2. Brightness & clarity - no apparent particles or solids and, for liquid honey - free from any cloudiness or signs of crystallisation. The surface should be free from wax particles.
3. Purity (free from particles, solids and wax) (for the Raw Honey categories)
4. Colour - the colour should comply with required standards.
5. Aroma - there should be no sign of the jar having held any previous product and no evidence of over-heating. Any floral aroma should be of a kind that is consistent with the classification.
6. Viscosity - the honey should be of good density.
7. Flavour - should indicate that the honey is a good sample from the most recent season and predominantly that of the relevant class.

MEAD

The criteria by which mead is judged are as follows:

1. Presentation - in keeping with standard requirements with an appropriate air space (clear glass straight bottle with screw top caps).
2. True to Class - a sweet in a sweet class and a dry in a dry class.
3. Brightness - brightness of the mead in the bottle, clarity.
4. Palate Appreciation - a judge's perspective of the product (subjective)
5. Aroma - an identification of floral source
